Phillips v. Evening Star Newspaper Co., 105 DAILY WASH. L. REP. 1425 (D.C. Super. Ct. 1977) 664

This issue represents the first annual review of important cases, trends, and problems of the District of Columbia courts. Its unique position as the seat of national government as well as a burgeoning municipality makes the District a fascinating place to study and practice law. We hope our subscribers who are members of the District of Columbia bar or who are interested in the emerging judicial prominence of the District will give us some feedback on this issue and suggest important local topics which we may want to feature next year.
