SYMPOSIUM ON REEXAMINING THE LAW OF WAR

Introduction to the Symposium on Reexamining the Law of War

Marshall J. Breger and Marc D. Stern ................................................................. 745

Responding Lawfully to al Qaeda

Jordan J. Paust ..................................................................................................... 759

Where Are Terrorists To Be Tried: A Comparative Analysis of Rights Granted to Suspected Terrorists

Amos N. Guiora .................................................................................................. 805

The Prohibition Against Torture and Cruel, Inhuman, and Degrading Treatment and Punishment: Can the Absolute Be Relativized Under Existing International Law?

Yuval Shany ....................................................................................................... 837

Robert J. Delahunty .............................................................................................. 871

The Collision Between Common Article Three and the Central Intelligence Agency

A. John Radsan ................................................................................................... 959

Transnational Terrorist Organizations and the Use of Force

Daphné Richemond .............................................................................................. 1001

COMMENTS

Should Public Employers Be Forced To Warn Their Employees of Their Immunity and Duty To Answer Questions before Demanding Answers and Taking Adverse Action?

Matthew Berni ..................................................................................................... 1037

Advancing the Argument in Favor of State Compensation for the Erroneously Convicted and Wrongfully Incarcerated

Lauren C. Boucher .............................................................................................. 1069

Is This the Start of a Silent Spring? Kelo v. City of New London's Effect on Environmental Reforms

Molly G. Brottmiller ............................................................................................ 1107