This issue of the Law Review on military justice was planned before Judge Brosman died. It is fitting now that we dedicate this number to him. No other person did more than he to give meaning to the Code of Military Justice. His service on the United States Court of Military Appeals was the last chapter in a full career.

Judge Brosman was a lawyer, a law teacher and a dean. For many years he represented Louisiana as a Commissioner on Uniform Laws. Few law teachers have done as much as he to raise the level of legal education in his state and in the country. Perhaps he did his most important work as a member of the American Bar Association’s Council for the Section on Legal Education. Many schools profited from Judge Brosman’s criticisms and advice. This School was one of them.
